

The Right Question

The right questions are not Why did this happen? or Whose fault was that? We usually know those answers. The better question: How can we help?

Discussion Questions

1. Can you think of a time when someone immediately helped you before asking questions about how you found yourself in a situation? If so, describe the experience.
2. When you notice a disruption that affects someone else, do you focus more on the reasons behind the disruption or do you jump in to help? What does a proper balance look like?
3. Read Acts 11:26–30. What are your observations about this passage?
4. It can be difficult to help someone without hoping for something in return. What are some ways we can avoid expecting something for our willingness to help?

Moving Forward

During Be Rich, our month-long generosity campaign, we remind our communities that everybody matters to God, whether God matters to them or not. Join us as we partner with some fabulous nonprofit organizations to meet critical needs in our communities.

Visit berich.org to participate.